This article is about the history of Cyprus from 1878 to the present. Cyprus was part of the British Empire , under military occupation from 1914-1925, and a Crown colony from 1925-1960. Cyprus became an independent nation in 1960.

History of Cyprus since 1878 - Wikipedia

In the troubled island of Cyprus, the national interests and rivalries of Greece and Turkey still collide, the population remains divided between the Greek and Turkish communities and the country is still a cat's paw of outside powers - especially the USA and the now resurgent Russia - as it has been since the acquisition of the island by Britain in 1878.

First thing to note is this is not a modern history of Cyprus. It is an extended essay on the political problems in Cyprus from the struggle for independence to the present, with the island effectively partitioned into a (largely) Greek Cypriot independent country and an, unrecognised except by Turkey, Republic of Northern Cyprus populated by Turkish Cypriots and Turkish immigrants.

From 1878 until independence in 1960, Cyprus was a British colony. During the 1950s there was a campaign among Greek Cypriots for union with Greece, "Enosis". The organisation which led the campaign was EOKA, which fought the British army. EOKA was led by Archbishop Makarios, who was exiled to Seychelles for a period.

Cyprus country profile - BBC News

Indeed it is a very difficult task to write history (Cyprus: A Modern History, W. Mallinson) and it is almost impossible to write the history of a country covering a period of 100 years. In the bibliography of a country's history there are so many contrasting views, analysis and theories that it is impossible to make sense about the "truth".
