Jeremy Bates has staked out a reputation as a solid horror writer whose tales run the gamut from occult thrillers to speculative science fiction. He has now forsaken the world of pure horror for that of straight up action in The Taste of Fear, an African-based thriller. Unfortunately, while the book is impeccably researched, Bates has a tendency to overstuff his plot with far too many elements for one novel, eventually causing it to bog down.

THE TASTE OF FEAR | Kirkus Reviews

Scream of Fear aka Taste of Fear (1961) is a marvelous, unknown (at least to me) Hammer film. The story concerns a girl in a wheelchair going to live with her Dad whom she hasn't seen in years. Upon arrival, she meets her stepmother for the first time and is informed that her Dad is away on business.
