Flexseal Puddle Flanges ensure a watertight and pressure-tight seal where pipes pass through concrete walls of any structure or building. When a pipe is required to pass through a wall or concrete structure it is usually cast at the point of construction. The concrete will not bond to the pipe and will usually shrink during curing, leaving an ingress path along the outside of the pipe allowing materials such as water, gases and hydrocarbons to pass through the structure or building.

TECHNICAL GUIDELINE

The puddle flange needs more than just the ring welded or epoxied to the pipe to prevent water seepage. Use is made of a water swelling tape. In Australia we use Hydrotite. I am sure that other products are available. Care must be taken as the tape can swell and burst the concrete locally. ie the concrete has to be sufficiently thick.

What exactly is a puddle flange? - Mechanical engineering ...

When working with puddle flanges, users should ensure that concrete cover is 50mm against every surface surrounding the flange. It's not recommended to use waterproof concrete. Each puddle flange is supplied with an inside seal diameter that's slightly smaller than the pipe's outer diameter, meaning that the rubber will need to be stretched over the pipe while it's being installed.

Puddle Flanges | Drainage Superstore®

Fitted puddle flanges have an outside diameter ≈4" larger than the pipe onto which they are installed (dependent on size). Concrete cover should be 2" against every surface around the puddle flange. Waterproof concrete should be used to ensure a water tight seal.
