This use of rhetoric is not opposed to reality and may (often) be used to support that which is true. However, the definition that I propose as a possibility is the use of rhetoric as ‘speech or discourse that pretends to significance but lacks true meaning’. We’ve noted that the phrase ‘by making abortion illegal, you don’t prevent abortion; you prevent safe abortion’ is fashioned to lead the hearer to a very specific conclusion; there is nothing wrong with that.

Rhetoric or Reality? | Freedom's Discourse

Abstract It is common in discussions about human resource management (HRM) to distinguish between “rhetoric” and what is regarded as a clearly separate “reality”. This is naïve in that it fails to recognize the way those researching the human aspects of management and those practically involved in it influence each other.
