Behavioural safety (bhav) programmes aim to improve safety by changing the behaviour of workers. They may also be called 'behavioural modification' or 'behaviour based safety'. Most bhav systems tend to believe that injuries (and possibly illnesses - see later) are the result of 'unsafe acts' by workers, and to prevent these unsafe

Behavioural safety - UNISON

There are two basic approaches to improving the human factors in safety: 1) changing the way people think and feel to change behaviour; or 2) directly address the behaviour to get people to do the right things at the right time. The first is encapsulated in 'hearts and minds' campaigns, while behavioural safety processes address the second.

Behavioural safety information and resources behaviour is in°uencing (positively or negatively) the behaviour of those we work with. Accordingly, starting with our own behaviour is an important mechanism to in°uence behaviour change at work, or anywhere else.
