Work A Little Less Live

Nine years ago, I started living a more bountiful life by working less, earning less, and spending less. I started by going to my employer's human resources department to ask if I might take a significant pay cut. "How significant?" they asked. I said, "I'm not sure yet; maybe 75 percent?"

Work a Little Less, Live a Lot More: MCKEON, Mark ...

We live in this world where on top of our work and our family obligations, parents are driving their kids from activity to activity. I see so many kids in our neighborhood whose schedules are filled to the brim with no downtime. I had a moment a few years ago with my three little kids, that I new I had to make a choice.

How I Find Work Life Balance By Doing Less

Hours of work in the United States began to decline after about 1870—from about 3,000 a year to 2,342 by 1929. In 1973 annual work hours stood at 1,887 (fewer than 40 hours per week, on average). If hours hadn't fallen, unemployment would have grown even before the 1930s Depression. Earn less, spend less, emit and degrade less.

When you live frugally, you have a much better chance of spending less than you earn. You can then use the difference to pay off debt, save, or invest. Or, all three! Plus, when you need less money to live, your earning needs reduce, too. You can work less, retire early, take time to travel. In short, you have more lifestyle choices open to you.

And working less could actually solve many of the world’s greatest problems. Working less could reduce stress — countless studies have shown that people who work less are more satisfied with their lives. In a recent poll conducted among working women, German researchers even quantified the “perfect day.” The largest share of minutes (106) would go toward “intimate relationships.” “Socializing” (82), “relaxing” (78) and “eating” (75) also scored high.
