Britain's participation in the war turned it into a world war and the country achieved at best a Pyrrhic victory and lost its superpower status. Ferguson argues that Germany's war aims did not pose a direct threat to the British Empire. One of the German war objectives was the creation of a customs union which looks a lot like the current EU.

In War of the World, published in 2006, Ferguson argued that a combination of economic volatility, decaying empires, psychopathic dictators, racially/ethnically motivated and institutionalised violence resulted in the wars and genocides of what he calls "History's Age of Hatred".

Niall Ferguson - Wikipedia

A good overall book. Its not a long boring list of battle but divided by topics from mass media to the captor dilemma (why few prisoners were caught). It blame in part Germany for causing a continental war and the British Empire for causing a world war.
