Ratios based on weight are the most accurate method for a professional kitchen but also require the ability to convert between different measurements. For example, a ratio for preparing a stock calls for 3 parts liquid to 2 parts bones (3 lbs. water to every 2 lbs. of bones), which means converting the water to a liquid measure (knowing that a one-pint liquid measure equals one pound takes out some of the mystery).

Soft dough is used for biscuits while stiff dough is used for piecrust. According to most chefs, the ratio of flour to liquid to fat to make the perfect pancake is 2 parts flour, to 2 parts liquid, to 1 part egg, and a half part fat. 21 Of course cooking techniques also affect the end product.
