Take Advantage of Your Child's Verbal Skills. Parents of school-age children have a distinct advantage over parents of toddlers when it comes to dealing with behavior such as defiance: They can talk it out. Calmly discuss with your child what they want, and then try to work out a solution that works for both of you.

7 Effective Ways to Handle Defiant Children

You can let your child know when you're pleased by giving them attention, a hug or a smile. Offer rewards. You can help your child by rewarding them for good behaviour. For example, praise them or give them their favourite food for tea. If your child behaves well, tell them how pleased you are. Be specific.

Dealing with child behaviour problems - NHS

The first step in dealing with inappropriate behavior is to show patience. This often means taking a cooling period before saying or doing something one might regret. This also might involve having the child or student sit in a time out, or remain alone until their teacher can deal with the inappropriate behavior.

9 Strategies to Handle Difficult Behaviors in Children

Tackle anger together. Team up with your child to help them deal with their anger. This way, you let your child know that the anger is the problem, not them.

With younger children, this can be fun and creative. Give anger a name and try drawing it – for example, anger can be a volcano that eventually explodes.
