People typically envision prophecy in terms of God communicating through a prophet to others some important information that could not have been known to the prophet in any ordinary way. Prophecy is interesting from a philosophical point of view for many reasons, including the fact that it raises compelling questions about divine knowledge and communication, human language, the nature of time, and human freedom.

Geoffrey Ashe, a prolific author who has written extensively on Arthurian legend, has compiled an encyclopedia of people, places, and topics having to do with prophecy. He points out in his preface that the emphasis is on "prophecy in the predictive sense, with or without a claim to inspiration," not on "rational forecasting" (vii).
