connecting rods are being remanufactured. These connecting rods use a full floating piston pin design which allows for a serviceable bushing on the small end of the rod. At the factory these bushings are align-bored after installation to provide accurate control of the distance between the big and small end bore centers (C-C). Doing so, controls the resulting piston protrusion after engine assembly.

A connecting rod, also called a con rod, is the part of a piston engine which connects the piston to the crankshaft. Together with the crank, the connecting rod converts the reciprocating motion of the piston into the rotation of the crankshaft. The connecting rod is required to transmit the compressive and tensile forces from the piston, and rotate at both ends. The predecessor to the connecting rod is a mechanic linkage used by water mills to convert rotating motion of the water wheel into rec
