Coming to Writing is a wonderful and inspiring essay, a little like The Laugh of Medusa, published only a year before (1975). It's a cosmogony of love. Love as a force, language and source of self-expression, resulting from an alienating reality: intimately, the experience of the author as a Jewish German expatriate in Algeria, universally, as being a woman.

Coming to Writing and Other Essays Quotes by Hélène Cixous

Her first bane become a becalmed verb. I have always wanted to read Lispector and these essays didn't really affect that. I liked Stigmata much more than Coming To Writing, though the titular piece does reach the incredible. Cixous broaches other arts here, music and painting and I was left unable to prosper. Underfunded and footsore. So it goes.
