A gender perspective on citizenship begins with an assertion of the rights of all women and men to equal treatment. This needs to be enshrined in constitutions, laws and legal processes. Applying equal standards to all citizens may be insufficient, however, if different groups of citizens face particular challenges and have distinct needs.

Gender and citizenship - GSDRC

Gender scholars have much to say about governing and governance but cast a wider net, as do many mainstream scholars as well. Politics, understood as “the authoritative allocation of value” (in David Easton’s classic formulation) or as the working of systems of power and authority, has a much wider purview.
