Assessment With Projective Techniques A

Projective techniques. One group of assessment specialists believes that the more freedom people have in picking their responses, the more meaningful the description and classification that can be obtained. Because personality inventories do not permit much freedom of choice, some researchers and clinicians prefer to use projective techniques, in which a person is shown ambiguous stimuli (such as shapes or pictures) and asked to interpret them in some way.

Personality assessment - Projective techniques | Britannica

Projective techniques are assumed to provide assessment in depth, thereby bringing to light the less conscious levels of psychological functioning. This expectation is embodied in the so called levels hypothesis (Murstein & Mathes, 1996; Leichsenring & Hiller, 2001). Thus, these methods appear to be especially appropriate for the assessment of defense mechanisms.
