Yet for those like Helen Edmundson's Anna Karenina, the process is altogether more complicated and creative. "This is my story."/ "It seems that it is mine too." Framing the action of Tolstoy's novel within an imagined dialogue between Levin and Anna, Edmundson's play makes a necessity of its own theatricality. Fragmenting the story, distilling it down to a carefully curated selection of episodes, she is able to translate almost a thousand pages, and a cast of nearly as many ...
