The closing of the theatres by Parliament in 1642 is perhaps the best-known fact in the history of English drama. As the Parliamentary Puritans were then in power, it is easy to assume that all opponents of the theatre were Puritans, and that all Puritans were hostile to the drama. The reality was more interesting and more complicated.

In the years of its greatest triumphs the English theatre was in deadly danger. Its enemies, the Puritans, were waiting for their chance to destroy it, and in 1642, only twenty-six years after Shakespeare's death, they seemed to have succeeded. Plays were banned, theatres were pulled down, and actors were forbidden to perform and threatened with imprisonment and flogging if they did so.
