Abstract: As the basic tasks of face application technology, face detection and facial landmark detection are two important research directions in the fields of computer vision. In this paper, we employ the multi-task cascaded convolutional networks (MTCNN) to realize the multi-view face detection and landmark localization in complex environments. Firstly, a MTCNN-based frontal face detector is trained for frontal face detection and landmark localization.

A straightforward method for multi-view face detection is to build a single detector which deals with all views of faces. The second approach is to build several detectors, each of them corresponding to a specific view. In runtime, if one or more of the detectors give positive output for a given pattern, a face is considered as detected.
