Decide what statistics to use Statistics help to organise and understand numerical data so you can present it clearly. Your evaluation framework will help you decide which statistics to use. For example, you may want to report on the proportion of people who have experienced an outcome (percentage) or the type of people who have benefitted most and least from your work (cross-tabulation).

How to analyse quantitative data for evaluation — NCVO Knowhow

Data analysis is, therefore, a process that involves examining, and molding collected data for interpretation to discover relevant information, draw or propose conclusions and support decision-making to solve a research problem. This involves interpreting data to answer research questions and making research findings be ready for dissemination.

DATA COLLECTION, ANALYSIS & INTERPRETATION - QUANTITATIVE ...

Depending on size and type of data, understanding and interpreting data sets can be challenging. It's impossible to understand the data set and make conclusions just looking at the first or randomly selected 100 observations from millions of them. Don't expect to plot statistics for each feature if the data has thousands of variables.

Interpreting a data set, beginning to end

The limitations of using quantitative data for evaluation can include poor response rates from surveys, difficulty obtaining documents, and difficulties in valid measurement. In addition, quantitative data do not provide an understanding of the program's context and may not be robust enough to explain complex issues or interactions (Holland et al., 2005; Garbarino et al., 2009).
