Superficial chemical peels are the least abrasive of all chemical peel solutions and are meant to treat minor skin discolorations and uneven skin texture. During a chemical peel, a solution is applied to the treatment area which causes the skin to exfoliate and quite literally "peel off". In general, the more aggressive the treatment the more dramatic results, however, the recommended treatment will depend on desired depth of penetration, outcome, and tolerated recovery time.

Superficial Chemical Peels - Procedure Overview, Cost ...

Very superficial chemical peels affect the stratum corneum and stop penetration at the granular layer. Superficial peels can penetrate through the stratum corneum to the basal layer. Medium depth peels are typically performed by a physician or under the supervision of a physician and can penetrate down to the papillary dermis.
