In a recent Twitter exchange, a female journalist stated that United States Representative Alexandria Ocasio-Cortez and her “frequent crying” reinforce stereotypes that women are too emotional for politics. The journalist was seemingly referring to the representative’s emotional reactions to various human rights violations at the border

she had previously witnessed.

Women and Politics: Too Emotional?

Women in office motivate other women. The fact that more women are willing to run for office is a positive step. A study by High-Pipper and Comer showed that women represented by a woman are more interested and become more involved in politics and feel more skilled and effective than did those represented by a man.

In 2011, according to the Center for American Women and Politics at Rutgers University, 13 Black women served in the 112th Congress with 239 state legislators serving nationwide. The paths to public office for women in the Black community have differed from men and other groups, such as women's organizations, rallies, and fundraisers.
