Light For The Artist

When light matters. Getting the right painting lighting can have a profound impact on your art. Whether it's painting, drawing, sculpting or other arts, our daylight lamps for artists consistently simulate natural daylight, providing perfect colour matching qualities. This creates a very real and vibrant working environment, at any time of the day or night.

Daylight Lamps For Artists - The Daylight Company

The angle of the light in relation to your painting is the first thing I want you to consider. Ideally, the main light source will be behind you at a 45 degree angle to the painting. This will help: Spread the light evenly over your painting. You do not want half to be clearly lit, and the other half to be poorly lit.

Art Studio Lighting - How To Properly Light Your Art Studio

In Your Art Studio Natural light, often referred to as full-spectrum light, is generally considered the best illumination to work under. Unfortunately, the term “full-spectrum lighting” has no fixed definition.

I like the versatility here, especially as an artist that likes to move from the bed to the desk and back again. The long life soft white LED bulb produces 4000 – 4500 kelvin light and is adjustable. You press the base and the light toggles on & off. If you long press the light it'll get brighter.

Best Desk Lamps For Artists (Drawing and Painting)

Southern light casts strong shadows, which move as the sun moves through the sky. The main problem with painting in a studio/room lit by southern light is the constant shifting light direction. As the sun's rays move across the sky, shadows created by that moving light move around in your studio/room.

Why Northern Light Is Best For Artists - Chris Chalk

Good lighting is important for visual art work. In addition to simply being able to properly see what you are doing, the accuracy of the colour you are working with is important. That's where Daylight Lighting is helpful – both for getting some light where you need it with lamps that have a clamp, floor stand or table stand, and for allowing you to see your colours accurately.
