During a turn in level flight, greater lift is required to offset increased effective aerodynamic weight of the aircraft in the turn. Because the angle of attack of an aircraft must be increased to offset the increased aerodynamic weight (resultant force of a turn), the wing is closer to the critical angle of attack and therefore closer to a stall, despite a constant airspeed.

Theory of Flight Flight is a phenomenon that has long been a part of the natural world. Birds fly not only by flapping their wings, but by gliding with their wings outstretched for long distances. Smoke, which is composed of tiny particles, can rise thousands of feet into the air. Both these types of flight are possible because of the principles of physical science. Likewise, man-made aircraft ...
