Pigeons (Complete Pet Owner's Manual): Vriends, Matthew ...

Pigeons such as Kings, Fantails, Tumblers and Homers are smart, beautiful and gentle birds. They've been selectively bred and tamed and, while they can't survive in the wild, they thrive as pets. Many pigeons (and other birds as well) wind up in animal shelters, either surrendered or found as strays, but they need adopters to get out alive.

Pigeons As Pets: Outside or Indoors

This beginner's book covers common pigeon disease and their causes, basic care, breeding, natural history and basic training. The main downsides to this book are limited information on pigeon breeds and difficulties of keeping each breed, limited training information, and no information on keeping pet (house) pigeons.

Pigeons and doves have for centuries been kept for use in competitive breeding, homing and in recent history, racing. However, it is a little known fact that they are also raised as pets. With good reason, they can be very affectionate and loyal, and millions of enthusiasts have learned to love and appreciate them as companion birds.

Pigeons as Pets | Beauty of Birds

The average feral pigeon could live anywhere between three and five years. A domestic pigeon, on the other hand, may live up to 15 years. Keeping your pet pigeon healthy is the best way to ensure a long life, which includes having it checked by a veterinarian trained in caring for birds, on a regular basis.

Pigeon - Pigeonpedia

Pigeons are very friendly and social animals and they prefer to have company. If you are planning for keeping pigeons as pets, you should consider a pair (one male and one female). But if you plan to have only one, you should be committed to giving it a lot of attention and also ensure that you have enough time for your bird.

How to Keep Pigeons as Pets: Raising Guide For Beginners

Pigeons in captivity, such as those you keep for pets, naturally live longer than feral pigeons because they are safe and well cared for in your home. A pet pigeon may live up to 15 years. However, feral pigeons have a lifespan of only three to five years. They may live longer in the wild if predation is low and humans leave them alone.

Pigeons do great indoors as family pets. They can also live outside in a predator & rodent-proof aviary but I would never make a single pigeon live outside alone.

They are flock birds and to be outside alone is stressful and lonesome for a pigeon. A single pigeon living indoors adopts the people as flock members.
