Daoism maintains that you should foster serenity at all times and in all activities. Activity itself is best limited to only what is most natural (ziran) and necessary—"nonaction" (wuwei) is thus frequently enjoined. For Daoists, meditation has been a primary means of fostering serenity and bringing it to greater depths.

Daoism, Meditation, and the Wonders of Serenity

Tao meditations are a practice used alongside Taoism. This form of meditation has been used for many centuries. This form of meditation focuses specifically on mindfulness, concentration, visualization, and contemplation. Sometimes Tao meditations are referred to as "returning to the source" or "embracing the one."
